Dear Jackie, How do you write about your late best friend? You and I shared so much for six wonderful years in middle school and high school, and we were supposed to share so much more. Your presence in my life was so pivotal to my emotional development as a teenager. For years, you were my person. My shoulder to cry on, my sounding box to complain to, my confidant to share my dreams with. I regret how we have slowly lost touch over the last three years of college. After high school, our lives took dramatically different paths, and we drifted. I didn't check in with you as much as I should have. I allowed our natural differences to drive us apart, even when I know that I could have remedied the situation through a simple text message, email, or phone call. In the notes you left behind, you said that you were equally at fault as those of us whom you left behind because you chose not to reach out to us when you were struggling. But I will always wonder what more I, and anyone else in your life, could have done for you. Those questions will remain with me for the rest of my life, and I can only hope that they will prompt me to be a more caring and conscientious friend in the future. Maybe, with this newfound awareness, I will be able to save others. While your passing feels like an insurmountable injustice to your family and friends, I know that there is a small silver lining, and that your dying wish for me would be to keep that in perspective. What I have learned from your death is that you must embrace those that you love while they are still around. I would rather sit in awkward silence or scream at the top of my lungs at someone I love rather than simply ignoring them and losing their relationship forever. Love defines your life, and I will from now on chose to have as much of it as possible, even if it is complicated and imperfect. You were the most kind, gentle, considerate, caring, patient and loving person I have ever known. You lived your life with intention, never willing to sacrifice who you were for anyone. Your strength and grace carried me though some of the most difficult times of my life. You were always there for me when I needed you. In addition to accepting me for who I was, you taught me that if I wanted to, I could be an even better person. You didn't realize it at the time, and maybe you never did, but you not only taught me that it is possible to change, but also how to. You made me better simply by being a part of a my life. You weren't only my friend, you were also my role model. I am not able to describe how much I learned about the beauty of humanity from you. As we part ways, I am left to ponder when we will be reunited. Even though we do not share the same faith, I will eternally hold onto hope that our time together is not over. Even if we have permanently parted, I sincerely hope that you are in a better place now. Your spirit will live on forever because I will carry it with me every day. All my love,
Amanda

Jacqueline, Always a kind, gentle, caring, sensitive, and compassionate soul. Your inner beauty and depth showed in your beautiful art works. You always put your heart and soul into everything you did. I was thankful every day that you were in my classes, for I knew the world needs a thoughtful and caring soul like you. I remember your quiet smiles. I remember you asking me how I am doing, how my day has been?.. I miss you in this world but I hope you find your peace and freedom where you are. Rest in peace, Jacqueline. Ms. An

Dear Jacque! By the first time I met you, I had lots of of impression toward you. Most of them were your characteristic. You were quite of an introvert and a silent person. But beside that, you were also were happy, cool, and interesting girl. To me, you were the first person to listened to me, understood me and gave me a lot of useful advices, which I hardly ever have beside my mom. But the point is you were always a model that my mom wants me to be, since we were quite opposite. You are girly and I am tomboyish. And? well maybe just it. Sometimes, everybody keep saying that I ought to be more like you, more girly like you, which was always annoyed me. But I was just because I was jealous, because that meant you are more perfect than me in everybody eyes. You are smart, polite, and more modest than I am. But you had encourage me to be myself and ignored what the other think, which have helped me a lot. Now, althought you were gone, I still want to say ?Thank you! Thank you for the advices, and not just that, thanks you for listened to me and understood me, thanks for everythings that you have done to me!?. I wish you a better and more wonderful life on heaven. You were a very nice and wonderful cousin I ever have. REST IN PEACE, JACQUE, Your cousin, Bui Khanh Nhu

The world we live in is like a room of candles, each of us emitting a light. While many simply burn with average brightness, once in a blue moon, one will blaze with the heat and light of a thousand suns. Jackie was that flame. She was a good artist, a nice friend, and a wonderful human being. I met Jackie in anime club during my sophomore year, and became friends with her, as well as Ada Ulriksen and Caitlin Hoover. While I was not as close to Jackie as Caitlin was, I still saw her as a friend and appreciated her as an artist and human being. While her and I didn't always see eye-to-eye, I never held animosity toward her. I could write an essay on the wonderful things Jackie did, the wonderful things she made. And the ability to work toward her goal, no matter how hard. There were times where I would sulk, and she would snap me out of it. There were times where I raged and lashed out, or cried in the face of adversity, and she would listen and offer advice. Jackie was a brilliant woman and a friend I am glad I had. I have seen many people pass into serenity. Many elders and relatives have left this mortal coil into whatever awaits us all on the other side. But to have a friend like Jackie die in her prime, to see such a kind-hearted, assertive, and intelligent person fall before her time, that is a tragedy far greater. Jackie had a brilliant mind and a caring spirit that we are poorer for not having. Jackie, wherever you are, be it in another life or in a place of divine peace, I wish to say this: You were a wonderful person and a friend I would not have traded for anything. I wish you well wherever you are now, and we will never forget you. Best of luck, my friend, and we miss you greatly. -David Andrew Glass
