Jiun Wei was a co-worker in Taiwan, close family friend, loving husband, great father, exceptional cook, tireless gardener, visionary person, and the smartest person among all our friends, who got his Ph.D. & MBA at prestigious universities. For the past 30+ years, with our families and friends together, we were always cracking up at his jokes and impressed by his thoughtful remarks. He was always smiling and helpful. We had so much fun together, either on holiday celebrations, birthday parties, or reunions, etc. The world is not the same anymore without him. We will miss him greatly. Without Jay, our group lunch is not the same anymore. During the lunch time before, Jay and I often talked about growing up in the 60's and shared our similar life experience in Taiwan. I also gained some of Jay's profound knowledge of fixed income strategies. Jay will be truly missed around here.Namo Amitufofo, Michael Cheng##imported-begin##Michael Cheng##imported-end##

Jay is a very kind family man. Always have a smile on his face. He is low key and not a flashy type of guy – as it took us over a year before we found out he went to East Coast for graduated school and got a MBA from across town. He is a very smart guy! I can still see him stroll down the hallway and buy his diet Coke every afternoon. Coming down near our cubicles around lunch time to find us and go out to eat together. He shared his stories on how he finished his sprinkler system at home and backyard BBQ is the next project. I liked the one about his younger son forgetting his apartment keys when Jay helped him to move to UC Davis. I really miss Jay.##imported-begin##Rita Hui##imported-end##
