I remember one time, after a week at Lake Almanor, Manny asked all of us to follow him. So, we all packed up, and headed out from the one hotel we always stayed at, and started following Manny up this long mountain road. It was summer, so it was sticky hot in that part of Northern California. As we started winding up this road, all of us were getting tired and grouchy, we were all wondering when was this road going to end? As we were getting higher and higher on this winding mountain road, we started to see snow on the side of the road. Pretty soon the entire area was blanketed in snow. We were all wondering what we were doing all the way up this mountain covered in snow? We were all tired, and in our shorts, all of us just wanted to go home, but who could ever say no to Manny? Manny found a place to park all the cars and we all got out. He was grinning ear to ear, his hair waving in the breeze, as he announces, this is where we are going to have lunch! Suddenly, coolers appeared filled with ice and beer, and bread appears as if out of nowhere, condiments and other veggies come out of another cooler, and pretty soon we are all eating sandwiches sitting in the snow looking out at an amazing view from the top of Mt. Lassen. After we ate, we all started making snow angels in the snow and, of course, someone started a snow ball fight! The next thing you know, we are all throwing snow balls and ducking for cover behind whatever we can, a boulder, a snow bank, we were ducking and diving everywhere. We were all laughing so hard, it was awesome! Pretty soon, we all started to say our good-byes, but now, instead of complaining about traffic or worrying about Monday, instead we all had huge smiles plastered all over our faces. I never forgot that day, and to this day just thinking about it makes me think of Manny and his beautiful smile. Dawn "The Dancer" Linsley-Schott-Woodworth
